ENGL 2513 Introduction to Creative Writing (H) Max Enrollment: 21
This course is designed to serve as an introduction to the writing of poetry, short fiction, and creative nonfiction, with special attention to the way the elements of good writing craft applies across all three genres. Our work in this course is three-fold. First, we will learn to read like writers, discussing the techniques, practices, and styles of diverse literary traditions and accomplished authors. Second, we will write our own creative pieces inspired by and modeled after our readings. You will also periodically be assigned in-class and take-home prompts as a way to get you to exercise other or new writing muscles. They will provide you with an opportunity to try different forms and voices for size, to broaden (or perhaps challenge) your own writing comfort zones, and, when necessary, to give you strategies for overcoming "writer's block." You might find, too, that they might teach you new ways to approach your own thinking, writing, and revision processes. Finally, in workshop-style, we will help each other shape the best versions of our poems and prose by reading and offering feedback on each other's work.

ENGL 2963 Survey of Nonwestern Traditions (HI) Max Enrollment: 30
Our focus in this class will be postcolonial literature that raises questions about going to class. Readings will span genres (novels, poetry, memoir, and short stories) and nations (Kenya, Ghana, Zimbabwe, Australia, South Africa, and India). These literary works will be linked, however, insofar as they invite consideration of how institutional education can be not only a ticket to freedom, but also a distraction from injustice, or even a form of imprisonment. The class will include an introduction to key terms in postcolonial studies and the opportunity to think about the global politics of literature in English in the late twentieth and early twenty first centuries.

ENGL 3060 Creative Nonfiction Writing
This semester, we're going to explore the versatile genre of creative nonfiction. We'll try personal and researched material, lyric and narrative structures, memoir pieces and personal essays. We'll work on describing our own lives and other people's lives with equal vividness, using imagination, research, and linguistic beauty to bring memories, facts, and historical events to life. At the end of this semester, you'll have two solidly revised essays, ideas and drafts for essays you'll write in the future, and a stronger understanding of where you fit in as a writer among contemporary essayists.
CRN 69493 - Childers, Sarah - LEC - MWF 1030-1120 M304A - Max Enrollment: 18

CRN 61318 - Jones, Edward - LEC - MW 1430-1545 M306

ENGL 3193 African-American Literature Max Enrollment: 27
This course will examine the history of writing about black life beneath and beyond the constraints of white authority. The specific context for these "constraints" is understood to begin with the Middle Passage and the forced dislocation and enslavement of black people from the African continent. Surveying African American authors from the eighteenth century to the present, the course considers interconnections between power, race, civic and social life, and the desire to imagine and construct narratives of African American identity. During the semester, students will develop skills of literary evaluation, will learn to identify different genres of writing, and will practice a critical analysis of race in America. The readings for this course are diverse in content as well as form, covering autobiographical writing, critical and theoretical essays, black folklore and stories in the vernacular tradition, plays, poetry, political speeches, hip hop albums, and excerpts from longer novels. Select authors may include: Venture Smith, Phillis Wheatley, David Walker, Sojourner Truth, Harriet Jacobs, Frederick Douglass, Ida B. Wells-Barnett, W. E. B. Du Bois, Paul Laurence Dunbar, Alain Locke, Zora Neale Hurston, Richard Wright, Gwendolyn Brooks, Ralph Ellison, James Baldwin, Malcolm X, Maya Angelou, Alice Walker, Amiri Baraka, Toni Morrison, Tupac Shakur, Jay-Z, Lauryn Hill, and others.

ENGL 3203 Advanced Composition Max Enrollment: 18
In this course, students will critically engage with texts in various communicative modes. The course is divided into two parts: in the first half students will create a professional digital presence; in the second half students will interrogate and analyze/evaluate a news source, distinguishing between ethical reporting and propaganda. Assignments consist of readings, online discussions, and formal compositions.
Prerequisites: 9 hours of English.
CRN 61120 - Daniel-Wariya, Joshua - LEC - MWF 1130-1220 ES211B
ENGL 3243 Literary Theory and Criticism Max Enrollment: 27
This course surveys the main trends in ancient and modern literary theory, examining the various ways literary theorists from Plato and Aristotle to Jameson and De Man have described the nature, function, production, and interpretation of literature. How, in particular, have twentieth and twenty-first century literary theorists grappled with the recurrent problems of defining literary language, determining literature’s place in society, and establishing frameworks for its interpretation? We will begin by looking at the broad sets of questions that have driven literary theorists for over 2500 years before focusing on the dominant modes of critical inquiry that have guided modern reading (including New Criticism, structuralism and poststructuralism, deconstruction, feminist inquiry, psychoanalysis, Marxism, New Historicism, and postcolonial theory). In addition to the scrupulous and attentive analysis of challenging daily readings, assignments include essays and exams.
CRN 61321 - Wadoski, Andrew - LEC - MWF 1030-1120 CLB119

ENGL 4523 Professional Writing Internship Max Enrollment: 5
This course provides a supervised work-and-learning experience in professional writing. Students who wish to enroll must receive prior permission from the instructor. Enrollment is contingent upon the availability of internships. Interns should spend nearly all of their time engaged in writing and writing-related activities such as editing, design, interviewing, or conducting research. They will maintain a daily work-related log that documents what they do on the job and what they are learning about the workplace and the profession. They will write monthly progress reports, meet with the instructor and other internship students regularly, and develop a portfolio that contains significant samples of work completed.

ENGL 4530 Exploring Professional and Workplace Genres Max Enrollment: 25
How does your hometown's city council compose and distribute its meeting agendas and memos? Why is the manual of the new bread machine at home written that way? Who are the stakeholders in a company’s social responsibility report, and what standards do reports like that adhere to? What is in a journal article abstracts? What would you do if your employer need you to design a pamphlet for fundraising purposes? Questions like these will help us explore the contextual and textual dimensions of a wide range of professional and workplace genres in this course. Using various frameworks of analysis, we will develop an eclectic understanding of genre and its relevance to our future professional writing practice. Assignments include short response papers, quizzes on readings, presentations, a research report, a final exam, and a digital or paper-based portfolio of professional genres relevant to your future work, among others. Students from all areas welcome. No background in rhetorical genre theory expected and no prerequisite courses needed.

ENGL 4600 Studies in Milton Max Enrollment: 25
Felix culpa, pre- and post-lapsarian behavior, antinomianism, pandemonium, and arianism are heady topics associated with a writer largely known for a long poem about a familiar subject: the garden of Eden, Adam and Eve, and a talking snake. Find out how all of this has come to be. 2 papers, 2 exams, one tutorial, reading quizzes.

ENGL 4630 Advanced Fiction Writing Max Enrollment: 18
Students will actively participate in a lively workshop environment. Each student will have two fiction workshops. We will focus on the creative process of writing original stories, covering everything from generating ideas to revising a final draft. Because this class focuses on writing and the creative process, we will examine our own work and the work of published authors. Creative exercises will be an important aspect of approaching the writing process. Therefore, each student will keep a writing journal to organize assigned exercises. Since this is an advanced course that focuses on craft, the class will assume that students have had previous creative writing courses and workshop experience.

ENGL 4640 Advanced Poetry Writing Max Enrollment: 18
In this intensive, workshop-style course, we will write and discuss our own poetry, as well as study the rich and varied work of other contemporary poets. Our course readings this semester include award-winning, full-length poetry collections whose individual parts work toward a much larger thematic, unified whole. They feature poems linked by a common theme, subject, formal constraint, or otherwise singular focus—books “with a hook,” as some have put it. The collections, in addition to examples I will supplement throughout the semester, will serve as models and guides for our individual, semester-long writing projects that draw from self-selected “Wellspring Texts.” We will be writing, in short, with our creative obsessions and preoccupations squarely in mind. Over the course of the semester, we will also visit the stacks of OSU’s Edmon Low Library as a way of practicing the writing and assembling of linked poems that echo similar metaphors, image systems, personas, historical moments, or specialized vocabularies.

ENGL 4710 Mark Twain Max Enrollment: 25
Samuel L. Clemens, AKA Mark Twain, remains the funniest author in the American canon even if his humor is not always exactly funny. Even as he makes us laugh out loud he compels our recognition of human hypocrisy, absurdity, cruelty, and social injustice. With particular attention to what he brings to the conversation about class and racial division in America, this course will examine the role of humor in raising our awareness of what sets us apart as well as what fuses us together. To complement our appreciation of The Adventures of Tom Sawyer, Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, Life on the Mississippi (selections), and Pudd’nhead Wilson, we will also read novels by Frances Harper and Charles Chesnutt, two of Clemens’ African American post-reconstruction era contemporaries. Three 4-6 page papers, one in-class presentation, and final take-home exam.

African American Studies

AFAM 3950 Black Thought in the Age of Mass Incarceration Max Enrollment: 17
(Former course title "Black Lives Matter")
Protests against police brutality have brought greater attention to the centrality of anti-Black racism in American life. In this course, we will study some of the historical, ideological, and cultural forces that shape anti-Black racism. In our work we will center the voices, analyses, and expectations of Black thinkers. Our goals are twofold: 1) to examine how African American intellectuals have reflected on the personal and communal effects of racial injustice; 2) to familiarize ourselves with recent scholarly work on mass incarceration as a system of social control. This is an interdisciplinary, reading- and writing-intensive course. Cross-listed with AMST 3950.

HONR 1000 The Story of Lizzie Borden: Axe Murder in American Culture (DH)
Max Enrollment: 22
In 1892, Lizzie Borden was accused of killing her father and stepmother with an axe. She was eventually acquitted, but her story had captured the American cultural imagination. This course will take a chronological approach to the history of the Lizzie Borden story as it evolves from news reports contemporaneous to the case through broadsides and early true-crime takes to fictionalized versions in the form of short stories, poems, novels, plays, a ballet, an opera, and multiple film versions. Specifically, we will consider how changing concepts of gender shape the way in which the story gets told in different media and in different moments in American history. Ultimately, we will ask what it says about American culture that—for better or for worse—we simply cannot let Lizzie go! (NOTE: Now offering Humanities (H) and Diversity (D) General Education Credit for Fall 2018!)
